To Whom It May Concern:

I have had the pleasure of working with Jerry Bennett on at least two occasions during the late 90's and am pleased to provide him a reference.

My responsibilities in IBM's Consulting Group involved defining and managing large, complex IT restructuring initiatives for many of IBM's clients. These restructuring initiatives involved Data Center and systems relocations, consolidations, and simplification efforts all designed to achieve specific IT and Business objectives.

I have had the pleasure of working with Jerry on at least two of these opportunities. In both cases, he personally provided systems and technical expertise critical to the successful design, planning, and implementation of those elements of the program for which he was responsible. His project management skills, devotion to quality and focus on results were skills that I depended upon to achieve my objectives. Additionally, while employed with BGI Professional Services, Inc. (BGI), he was a source of additional skills and expertise, and intellectual capital that I have found to be invaluable in supporting these types of initiatives.

Yours sincerely,

William G. Miller
